

YOUNG DYLAN

PRESIDENT’S NOTES

In a world of waste, we’ve decided to further our carbon neutrality. In the past, tons of our fellow print publishers have had to rerun an issue for a myriad of reasons. Now, we are in a web realm of decentralization and autonomy, and innovative ideas must reign supreme if we won’t increase the earth’s life expectancy.

For almost a decade, 360 has had no choice but to become more resourceful and attain the unachievable. Instead of taking on disgruntled workers, our new directives are aimed towards inclusivity and working in tandem with disadvantaged business enterprises who mirror our multi-hyphenate lifestyle. It’s been too long that the complexity of our human lives have impacted our pages. Thus, we wanted to reintroduce our readers to the full page bleeds, allowing our supporters to better experience the art. To give our team once again the opportunity to reintegrate consumer touch points into one circle of solidarity. We humbly listened and introduced QR code pages which lead to stories. In a fast paced society, these stories that once had a shelf life can be updated within seconds using a robust expansive VPS, firewalls to protect your privacy and seamless interaction between your mobile device and this book. Lay on your stomach, let the pictures do the talking rather than unimaginative authors straying with words. If you need a tale, it’s only a click away. After all, we may cover breaking news, but we all could use a form of escapism.
